Integrating effective behavioral health into primary care through the Collaborative Care Model (CoCM) is evidence-based and shown to improve outcomes, prevent downstream health costs, and can help improve access to mental health services. At this event, led by Anna Ratzliff, MD, PhD, Director of the University of Washington AIMS Center, participants will learn how health systems can implement this model, including practical strategies such as how services can be billed through the new CMS collaborative care management codes. Medicare started to reimburse for the model in 2017, and an increasing number of private payers and state Medicaid programs are also reimbursing for the model.

Join the conversation with 15 health systems comprising the MN Health Collaborative who together are advancing towards greater integration by using a shared framework for action.

Participants will learn:

- A brief overview of the Collaborative Care Model
- Practical strategies to implement the Collaborative Care Model and measurement- based treatment-to-target
- How to overcome common barriers to practice transformation and sustainability, including Collaborative Care Model billing requirements, documentation, and clinical workflow challenges
- Minnesota examples and the framework by which Minnesota health systems are advancing IBH

Audience:

- Integrated Behavioral Health champions and health system leadership
- Providers/Clinicians, both primary care and mental health
- Practice Administrators – those who handle billing and documentation for practices
- Payers/Purchasers

The American Psychiatric Association (APA) is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME) to provide CME for physicians.
